

Autism One's Annual Conference in Chicago

June 1st, 2009

In Chicago, on May 20th-May 24th, the Autism One organization held its annual conference. According to journalist, David Kirby, a presenter at the conference, more research and study should be dedicated towards discovering environmental triggers of autism. He focused his presentation specifically on Metal, Myelin, and Mitochondrial damage. His suggestions throughout his presentation range from a call to action: searching out new pathways to autism, including environmental factors (food, air, water, and medicine) and live viruses to raising questions that need to be answered, rather than focusing our energy on the politics of the Autism debate.

To read more about his views on the Autism One Conference, click here.

To learn more about his presentation at the Autism One Conference, click here.